International conference

State and Law in the Course of Time 2021

International and interdisciplinary conference with a broad scope of topics that would like to welcome not only legal historians, which form the core of the performers, but also legal experts in other fields of law, historians, archivists and other professionals whose academic field of research is also involving the development of state and law since its beginning till present time. The aim of the conference is, in contrast to a number of narrowly thematically focused events, to enable participants to present the results of their current research and at the same time to provide a platform for the widest possible meeting of experts interested in the history of law and related fields.

Due to the situation caused by the spread of COVID-19 disease caused by coronavirus SARS-CoV-2, the faculty was forced to cancel last year's conference with the next conference taking place in 2021. However, the development of the pandemic situation shows that in the traditional term it will not be possible to hold a conference in a face to face form neither this year. Nevertheless we do not want to break the tradition and so we decided to maintain the continuity of these meetings, at least in the form of peer-reviewed proceedings. We believe that at least this form will interest you and you will support the continuation of the tradition of our Pilsen conference meetings with your contribution.

We would therefore like to invite you to participate in the publication of printed peer-reviewed proceedings

Acta historico-iuridica Pilsnensia 2020 – 2021.

Your contributions in the form described below

send to the email address slavikh@kpd.zcu.cz until 15th August 2021.

Thank you for your conference contributions.

INVITATION/CALL FOR PAPERS:

Between the two World Wars, the society in the territory of Czechoslovakia faced a fair number of problems, and some of them spilled over into serious crises, both particular and general, which required the response from the domestic political scene and the whole society. With the exception of the period between 1924 and 1929, Czechoslovakia faced several extensive crises. Whereas the aspects of foreign policy and international security of the reactions to the crises will be dealt with in another conference next year, this year's conference will be focused on domestic responses to the crises, above all in the institutional aspect of the critical infrastructure, which we conceive as a complex of elements of infrastructure, where any disturbance of their functioning would have a serious impact on the security of the state and on meeting the basic needs of the population, the necessities of life, health and economics of the state.

As World War I ended, Czechoslovakia had to cope with the transition from the state of war to peace, not only mentally and politically but also economically (through conversion of the industry), socially (for example demobilization, care of disabled ex-servicemen and the bereaved) and in health issues (public health, control of various epidemics, development of modern health service). In addition, it was essential to stabilize the machinery of public security and establish public administration in new territories, while – as a contemporary historian said – "the bronze cliff of state power" was being erected on the principle of the Czechoslovak political nationality.

At the beginning of 1930s, the Great Depression heavily struck the Czechoslovak society, causing many economic but also social, ethnic and consequently political and security problems.

During the gradual recovery from the economic depression, the threat to the very existence of Czechoslovakia was gradually increasing with the increasing hostility of the Nazi Germany as well as other neighbouring countries refusing the Versailles system, which culminated in the international crisis in late 1930s. This menace had to be responded by Czechoslovakia politically (also through adjusted legislation), economically (for example through building up supplies of strategic raw materials, redeployment of industry), but above all through strengthening of armed services (for example army reform, organization of new army units and other armed formations).

The conference aims at exploring the critical infrastructure of Czechoslovakia between the World Wars in its security, economic, social and health aspects and analysing the state of institutions of Czechoslovak democracy and – in general – the way the contemporary elites of particular nations and ethnic minorities of the Czechoslovak Republic approached the issue of the crisis, and how the states of crisis were experienced in the roles of active participants and victims, e.g. in the gender aspect.

Considering the complexity and extent of the topic, we suggest the following topic areas:

- Intellectual history of the crisis (e.g. philosophical, sociological and theoretical reflexions of the crisis in the interwar period and its reflexion in art);
- Legislative preparation for crises (e.g. adjusted legislation, establishment of special law courts and pursue of political consent);
- Security response to the crisis (e.g. transformation, reorganization and organization of new army units or specialized armed formations, including those meant for suppression of state terrorism);
- Economic, social and health service crisis (e.g. conversion of the economy from wartime to peace conditions, problems of supplies, war preparations taken in businesses important for the defence of the country, customs wars with the neighbours, forgery);
- Public administration and crisis (e.g. considerations of reforms of public administration, the officials' attitude to the crisis).

Applicants can register before 1st September 2021.
In your application, please, give the title of your presentation and abstract up to 1,000 characters, as well as the institution where you work and a brief CV. Send your applications to the e-mail address: david.hubeny@nacr.cz
Organizers of the conference reserve the right of selection of presentations for the conference programme.
The presentations given at the conference that will pass the review procedure will be published in the reviewed journal Paginae historiae in 2022.
